First Aid Class Set Aug. 23-24; Students Invited

A Red Cross standard first aid course will be offered here August 23-24, and all persons interested in taking the training are welcome to attend.

Mrs. John Holcombe, executive secretary of the South Iredell Red Cross Chapter, said James Wallace of Mooresville, a certified instructor, will teach the class that will be held at First Baptist Church.

Mrs. Holcombe said Wallace will use the multi-media teaching approach, meaning he will employ recordings, slides and other visual aids during the eight-hour class.

The course will be offered in two segments, from 6 p.m. until 10 p.m. each day. Mrs. Holcombe said persons planning to attend may call the Red Cross office to register.

REV. HAYDEN JONES
Visiting Evangelist

Special Services Scheduled At Assembly Of God

Special evangelistic-teaching services are scheduled to be held at the First Assembly of God Church, 407 West Wilson Avenue, next week.

The services will begin at the 11 a.m. worship hour on Sunday, August 19, and continue nightly through Sunday, August 26.

The visiting speaker will be the Rev. Hayden Jones, who has served as pastor, evangelist, Bible School teacher and campmeeting speaker. Mr. Jones served as pastor of the local church at one time several years ago.

He will use as his general theme throughout the services here: "Living Your Christian Life Now In The Light Of Eternity."

Pastor of the local church is the Rev. Fred Benfield.

Town Buys New Tractor

Mooresville is getting a new tractor for use at the municipal sanitary landfill.

The Town Board last week awarded a $28,500 contract to Western Carolina Tractor Company of Charlotte for purchase of an International crawler. The equipment is valued at $45,000. The town is trading in the tractor presently in use at the landfill.

The new tractor is a budgeted expense, and Town Manager Tate Mills said the price "is within the budget appropriation."

Western Carolina was low among three bidders. Carolina Tractor and Equipment offered $28,613 and a $30,260 bid came from Power Equipment Company.

CARL MALZ
Coming From Toledo

Malz LOF Engineering Manager

Carl D. Malz will serve as manager of engineering services in Libbey-Owens-Ford's Modura plant now under construction just south of town off N. C. 115.

Malz, who will come to Mooresville from an LOF position in Toledo, Ohio, was appointed to the post here by William Weaver, president of LOF Engineered Products. Malz has been design engineer for LOF's Modern Tools division.

Prior to joining Modern Tools, Malz was a designer with a Toledo engineering and architectural firm. He holds an associate degree in engineering from the University of Toledo, and he is a member of the Society of Plastic Engineers and Society of Mechanical Engineers.

LOF Engineered Products based in Toledo, manufactures a variety of injection-molded plastics products for the furniture and mirror industries, as well as molded products and tools and dies for the plastics industry. The Mooresville plant will use a new Modura composite material to produce table legs, pedestals and other furniture items that require the strength of wood.

Dr. Arthur S. Harberts Joins Davis Hospital Staff

Dr. Arthur S. Harberts, a specialist in obstetrics and gynecology, has joined the staff of Davis Hospital in Statesville, according to an announcement made today by the hospital's chief of staff, Dr. J. Sam Holbrook.

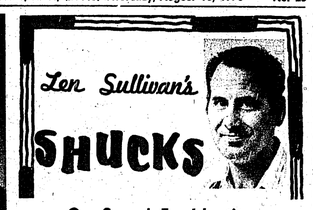
A native of Carthage, Ill., Dr. Harberts was educated at the University of California at Berkeley, during the second World War with the Navy V-12 Engineering Program. On completion of his service commitment he entered medical school in Bern, Switzerland, in 1950. He finished his Doctor's Dissertation in Medicine in 1956 and was granted his degree from the University of Zurich, Switzerland.

His specialty training in obstetrics and gynecology was at the Virginia Mason Hospital in Seattle. Prior to his beginning private practice he served in the Doctor Draft of Physicians with the U. S. Army in Fontainbleau, France. This duty was considered by the doctor as the most interesting in his years of practice.

The first nine years in private practice was in Bellevue, Washington, a suburb of Seattle. He was active in the Seattle Medical Society Committee charged with treatment of young people in neighborhood clinics. These clinics were established for treatment of young, unattached people.

During this time of practice, the doctor was also very active in post-graduate study in University of Washington Medical School.

Dr. and Mrs. Harberts and their two sons will reside at 140 East Water Street in Statesville.



Our Search For Identity

When the muse gets on his back so bad he can't shake it, Don Brock knocks out a "Ballad for the Boys." His resistance of late has been discouragingly strong, and now it appears he's having trouble with all the daughters of Zeus and Mnemosyne; he even has lapsed into prose. This has happened before, and I've had to remind him that regular wordsmiths we got, the poetry we need. This time he counters with evidence that not only is his heart pure as always, his cause is just. Brock, who has lived all over—St. Louis, Akron, Norfolk, Indianapolis—says he is taking up where I left off last week about good kids and bad kids. He reasons:

"Through the ages, as even inscribed on the pyramids, the cry has been raised that our children are going to the dogs. Well, the actual fact is, almost all children indulge in most of the experiences of life as they grow up. Just because of natural curiosity.

"Obviously, most young people struggle through and become good citizens. However, due to our very large population we do have a great many youngsters who get caught up in bad situations.

"Environmental and social influences control almost everyone's actions. We pattern ourselves after those with whom we associate. In large cities there is no such thing as personal identity, except in groups. A young person feels that no one knows or cares about him except the people he is with. He and his parents do not know their neighbors a door away. When the TV announcer raises the question 'Do you know where your child is?' at 11 'clock at night, many parents don't.

"We are most fortunate to live in Mooresville. There are some mighty fine people here, and their influence just has to make for better-adjusted children—and, later, better citizens. In a small community, people are known as individuals. This personal identity does not stop wrong-doing, but it does limit the repetition, the group rationalizing and, finally, the collective justification that quickly become habit. In effect, a small community provides a sort of security blanket for those who will accept its restrictions. It is true, of course, that our highly-mobile society has lessened the character-molding power of the small community, but it stands as a great force for good.

"The question was raised: Why do young people from good homes do good and also do bad? At a certain age all young people cannot contain their resentment of parental guidance, which they see as interference. They reach out for other relationships. Most are fortunate and form healthy relationships. Some few go the wrong way."

In The Beginning . . .

The invention of cable TV, as told by my friend Forklift (he is one husky guy) to his children: "Back before people had houses they lived in caves. This fellow made a down payment on a 23-inch color TV and took it home. He couldn't get nothing on it. He was about to burn his payment book when one day he visited his cousin who lived in a tree. His cousin could pick up the Watergate hearings on all channels beautiful. The way the fellow got up the tree from his cave was, he climbed this aluminum ladder. When he got back to his cave, he kicked his new TV. It slammed up against the ladder and commenced to show real sharp closeup pictures of Sam Ervin's jowls. The fellow couldn't figure what happened, so he went to see this man in the village that had made a name for himself by inventing fire. This guy said the picture had something to do with the ladder touching both TVs at the same time. He got him a franchise and sold ladders to all the folks in town, and they connected them from cave to cave. Everybody's TV worked great, but the beauty of the thing was that the ladders let folks get from one cave to another, so visiting was invented. Visiting turned out to be more fun than watching Watergate, so folks forgot TV. One day a million years later a scientist was digging in a cave and found the old franchise and went in business for himself. Since nobody visits or climbs ladders anymore, he used a cable."

Troy And The Super-Radish

O ye of little faith! When Troy McNeely says he's raising five-pound radishes, well, by thunder, he's raising five-pound radishes. I was out of the office when he came by with the runt of his patch the other morning, and I had the audacity to question his veracity. I called and asked if he knew what a turnip looks like. He set me straight. He ordered his radish seed from Japan (he spent years in the Orient during his Navy career) and, roughly translated, he's got poultry radishes. He showed me one that weighed in at five and a quarter pounds. With him standing that watching, it smelled a lot less like a turnip.

Mooresville's Gift To Biscoe

Mooresville folks read a recent "Eating Out in the Piedmont" feature in The Charlotte Observer with special interest. The Old South Inn Restaurant in Biscoe was Jerry Simpson's subject, and it has a strong Port City flavor. It is operated by Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Jones. That's Jerry, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Jones of Mooresville, Route 2, and Nan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oliphant of Statesville Road.

Cadet Torrence Attends ROTC Summer Camp

Cadet Charles K. Torrence, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred K. Torrence of Mooresville, route 4, received practical work in military leadership at the Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps Advanced Summer Camp, which was held at Fort Bragg from June 23 through August 3.

Cadet Torrence, a student at Appalachian State University at Boone, was one of some 7,200 students who attended ROTC training at five installations in the United States.

The ROTC advanced camp provides an opportunity for cadets to develop and demonstrate leadership capabilities in a field training environment. The instruction supplements theories and concepts which cadets learned in the classroom on campus.

Toyette Rathbone Attends National Majorette Clinic

Toyette Rathbone completed the certified National Majorette Clinics Summer Course of Instruction held at Sacred Heart College, Belmont, July 29-August 1.

National Majorette Clinics seek to develop the total personality of the majorette: mentally, physically, emotionally, and spiritually.

After four days of intense instruction and evaluation, Miss Rathbone was rated superior in twirling and marching; excellent in dance; and outstanding in halftime routine. Miss Rathbone was judged on knowledge, timing and unison, presentation of routine, twirls, personality and showmanship.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tracey' Rathbone of the Shearer's Chapel Road section of Mooresville, route 1, Miss Rathbone is a rising senior at Mooresville Senior High School, where she is a feature twirler.
