Cooking With Wood 'Has A Certain Naturalness To It'

Troutman Family Enjoying Best Of All Possible Energy Worlds

Whence Home-Heating Oil, Wince S. Iredell Newcomers

"We're like cows on a cement pasture," James Troutman said last week, "we're hopelessly dependent on something or somebody for everything."

Troutman is worried. He is fearful of the way we live our lives. The energy crisis, he feels, is but more evidence of surrender of our self-reliance.

As for the shortage of fossil fuel, Troutman surely isn't worried about himself and his family. The Troutmans, who live at 139 North Maple Street, have the best of all possible energy worlds. For cooking and heating, they have a choice of wood, coal, oil or electricity—or any combination. Their woodpile and coalbin are bountiful.

A visit to the Troutman home is a comfort these uncertain days. The neat-as-a-pin seven-room frame house and its well-kept surroundings call to mind basic values we yearn for. Plan your arrival at lunchtime, and you might see a pumpkin pie come steaming from the oven of that wood stove, as did a Tribune writer and photographer. Mrs. Troutman is hospitalized, so homemaking is in the capable hands of Troutman and daughter, Vonnie.

Troutman, 65, retired this year after a career as patternmaker at Crompton and Knowles here. Vonnie is a chemist at Bay State Milling Co. here.

First things first. You sample the pie (scrumptious), then you talk.

"I grew up with a wood range in the kitchen," Troutman says, nearly a year. Supply has been cut 10 per cent, a spokesman explained., "and we must look out for our regular customers." The same explanation came from other local oil distributors.

Municipal vehicles and equipment use some 5,000 gallons of gasoline each month. Town Manager Tate Mills said supply has been cut 10 per cent, "and we're cutting back wherever we can."

Ironically, trucks that deliver home heating oil are taking the

We're running out of everything. The mid-seventies are building into a study of scarcity economics. Money, money everywhere, but not a thing to buy. The used-car "blue book" is giving way to an older guide: caveat emptor. With rumors of 10-gallons-a-week gasoline rationing, the small-car market is bullish indeed; car comfort is being sacrificed on the altar of economy.

As prices and demand soar, supply nosedives.

In Mooresville, as everywhere, the much-publicized crises—energy being the most pressing currently—are as local as those who need what they cannot get.

A newcomer to town may move into a brand-new $45,000 home—without heat, and without promise of heat. The fuel oil dealers in the Mooresville area aren't taking on new customers.

What to do? Who knows?

Not the Mooresville Chamber of Commerce, although some people apparently think it does.

Last week, during the monthly meeting of the Chamber directors, Executive Vice President Joe Knox said people are being referred to his office with their fuel problems. When they complain about delays in getting their tanks topped, they are being told to "call the Chamber."

Knox told his directors he can offer no comfort.

Mid-State Oil Co. hasn't added a home fuel customer in

Nov. 26 Meeting On Tunnel

Town officials will not meet with Southern Railway representatives until November 26 to discuss the proposed underpass that would assure a cross-town corridor for motor vehicles without regard for rail traffic.

During its meeting last week, the Town Board set the meeting November 19. Town Manager Tate Mills said Wednesday the session has been delayed a week because the town wants to review its position with the state attorney general before meeting with the railroad. Mills said a meeting with the attorney general has not yet been scheduled.

The town plans to build an underpass just south of Oak Street that will connect Mackey and Academy streets. The

2 Changes In Election Vote Count

As a result of a canvass of returns in the November 6 election, two changes have been made in voting totals in Iredell County, the office of the Iredell County Board of Elections announced today.

Votes in the Turnersburg precinct against the liquor-by-the-drink proposal totaled 365, not 265 as originally recorded. This brought the total against the measure to 10,391 county-wide, with 2,655 voting for the

Uncle Dan From Doolie Says:

DEAR MISTER EDITOR:

I see by the papers where office workers fer this big company had a throw-away day. They went through all their files and got rid of all the paperwork that had been put on microfilm or replaced by more records. In one day, according to the piece, they cleaned out 1,050 file cabinets and not only saved $150,000 on the cost of new files, they found some office space they thought was lost fer ever.

Saturday night at the country store, I mentioned this item to the fellers. Republican Ed Doolittle, that ain't had a happy thought since Watergate opened, said he wondered what would happen if guvernment at all levels was to have a throw-away day. Ed said we'd have empty public buildings all over the country. And we'd find a heap of empty chairs behind a lot of cleaned-out desks to, was Ed's words.

Why is it, Ed wanted to know, that everthing we do in this country, from making copies to running short, we do to much of. Ed said he was reminded of a story 45 year ago about a hunting trip Will Rogers took to Africa. The Saturday Evening Post was paying him $1 a word to send back pieces on what he was doing. Ever time Will got a shot at some animal he'd put it in his report, and he'd allus write that he went "bang, bang, bang" at whatever it was. The magazine sent him a telegram and told him to quit shooting so much, cause he was costing em $1 a shot.

Will's dollar-a-shot ain't a drop in the bucket to what it's costing taxpayers to set down what all is said and done in guvernment, Ed said, and after all is said and done they is a heap more said than done. It costs us $200 a page to put out the Congressional Record, and that ain't a start. Ed said he had saw this piece where copies of speeches made in the Senate in the last session of Congress weighed 218 pounds and run to nearly 20 million words. And when you think of all them agencies with their millions of memos in quadruplicate, Mister Editor, it ain't no wonder we're running short of paper like we are everthing else.

Fathermore, allowed Clem Webster, onct a guvernment record is in the file, it's there fer ever. Clem said people in guvernment have a mortal fear that what they do won't be official unless it's wrote down, and fer Ed's benefit he added that a heap of em in Washington are wishing they had thought of a throw-away day a long time ago.

Actual, Ed said, we have to start with gitting rid of people in guvernment and work up to the paperwork. He had saw where the secretary of Health, Education and Welfare was cutting his public relations staff 70 per cent. He got rid of 184 jobs and 70 consultants , and he found 680 people that could be put on other work. On top of saving $20 million, the move will git rid of 275 HEW publications, and still leave plenty.

Yours truly,
Uncle Dan

Jaycee-Sponsored 125-Unit Yule Parade Next Tuesday Afternoon

Pretty Girls, Bands, Floats —And Santa

Sponsored by the Mooresville Jaycees, Mooresville's annual Christmas parade, consisting of approximately 125 units, will move through the downtown area next Tuesday, November 20, beginning at 4 p.m.

Made possible by the wholehearted cooperation of Mooresville's business houses, industrial plants and individuals, the seasonal pageant marks the official opening of the Yule shopping season in Mooresville.

The extravaganza, which will feature floats, bands, pretty girls and last, but not least, Santa Claus, will form on North Main Street and Stewart, Culp and Park Avenues. It will move south, along Main Street, from the Port City Shopping Center to the South Broad Street parking lot of Southside Baptist Church.

Barring inclement weather, thousands of persons are expected to view the parade as it moves along the one and one-half mile route.

"Next Tuesday afternoon culminates all the efforts put into the Christmas parade by the Mooresville Jaycees," says Jim Causby, parade chairman.

"The payoff will be witnessed by thousands of spectators from Mooresville and the surrounding areas," Causby continued.

Thirty floats, including 22 professionally-built ones, will be in the parade, along with 18 bands.

Bands scheduled to participate in the festival are: Mooresville Senior High, Mooresville Junior High, Bandys High, Maiden High, Saint Stephens High, Crest High, West Wilkes High.

And, North Gaston High, Southern Guilford High, Ledford High, Independence High, Ragsdale High, South Iredell High, Bunker Hill High, North Carolina A & T University, Salisbury Senior Citizens, West Mecklenburg High, and West Rowan High.

Among beauty queens and princesses in attendance will be Miss North Carolina, Heather Lee Walker of Hendersonville and the 1973 Carolina Dogwood Queen, Terri Nicks of Statesville.

Other queens and princesses expected are: Davie County High's Homecoming Queen, Davie County High's Christmas Queen, Miss Statesville, Saint Stephens High's Queen, North Iredell High's Queen, Olympic High's Queen, North

Royalty Will Appear In Town's Yule Parade

Two of the top beauties of the state—Miss North Carolina and the Carolina Dogwood Queen—are scheduled to participate in Mooresville's annual Christmas parade, scheduled for Tuesday afternoon, November 20, at 4 o'clock. Miss North Carolina, Heather Lee Walker of Hendersonville, is pictured at the left, while the Carolina Dogwood Queen, Terrie Nicks of Statesville, is at the right. These two lovely girls head the list of queens and princesses who will participate in the annual extravaganza that is this area's traditional launching of the Christmas season.

Council On Aging Gets County Backing, Seeks Federal Grant

Merchants To Feed Meters For Shoppers

The three principal governments of Iredell have assigned money to the new Iredell County Council on Aging, and council leaders now are ready to apply for federal financial backing.

Donald Stewart of Mooresville, chairman of the council, said this week that processing the request for a federal grant will take about two months.

"Everything is looking rosy for us right now," he said, "we are planning to be fully operational by April 1, and we will begin our fiscal year at that time."

The council has a $15,000 annual budget, and most of the money will be used in providing transportation for elderly persons of the county. The federal government will provide 75 per cent of the budget under a Title 3 program created to meet transportation needs of old people. Stewart said $160,000 in federal funds has been assigned to an 11-county Piedmont area, and his council is asking for $11,250.

The 25 per cent—$3,750—is assured form local governments. Mooresville has appointed

Troutman Area Woman Kidnaped And Raped

An Iredell County woman, identified as Ada Vern Mills, 51, of Troutman, route 1, was kidnaped at gunpoint by a man in Kannapolis Thursday night and forced to drive to Charlotte where she was raped and beaten, according to police.

A police car was at the station at the time, but it pulled away before the woman left, police said.

After the police car left, a youth with a gun approached the woman and forced her to drive him to Charlotte, police said.

Police said the woman told them she was forced to take off her clothes and was raped on Allen Street, in Charlotte, and was then beaten with a large piece of wood and a large rock.

Kannapolis police in Charlotte investigating the incident told Charlotte police the woman apparently was passing through Kannapolis when she stopped at a service station for gas.

Mental Health Center Dedicated

Mental health treatment in North Carolina is moving out of institutions and into the community—where it can be done best.

And, Iredell, Rowan and Davie Counties, with their new $400,000 Tri-County Mental Health Center in Salisbury, will be able to offer services to residents they've never been able to offer before, David Flaherty, North Carolina secretary of human resources, told more than 125 people at dedication ceremonies for the new facility in Salisbury Sunday afternoon.

The new facilities, he pointed out, provide for a variety of programs—for adult day care, for occupational therapy, for classes for pre-school retarded children, and for vocational rehabilitation. These programs were not possible in the former center and they reflect not only the new building but also a new emphasis in North Carolina which has recently increased mental health figures from one to nine per cent of the state budget.

The department of human resources, Flaherty said, will ask the next legislature for $8.5 million for new programs.

The Tri-County Center, he continued, is one of 42 centers in the state, and "I'm sure it will be one of the most productive" because the building reflects the ability to offer the new programs.

"I know the quality of leadership in this area," he said, thanking county commissioners from the three counties, local legislators, private groups, such as the Association for Retarded Children, and the public for accepting and supporting the mental health program.

"This," he concluded, "is a tremendous thing/ you have done."

Flaherty was introduced by Charlie Walters, a member of the Rowan County board of commissioners and the Tri-County Mental Health board.

The new center, Walters said, marks the end of seven years of dreams, he said, "made possible only by joining our sister counties of Iredell and Davie."

Walters himself received high commendation for the "work he has done for mental health in Rowan and this district" from J. Garner Bagnal, of
