process of distributing posters which inform 18-year-olds of their responsibility to register.
"Within the next few weeks," he said, "we will have distributed more than 16,000 posters."

McCachren indicated the posters will not only remind 18-year-olds of their responsibility to register but will also contain information as to where they might register.

"Budgetary requirements compelled us to close 80 of our county local board offices," McCachren said, "and in each county where the office has been closed, we have attempted to obtain the voluntary services of local citizens who will register our 18-year-olds."

designated as parent-teacher conference day. No group meetings will be held on this day, to allow time for these conferences.

Parents who would like to arrange a conference are encouraged to make an appointment by calling the school office, 664-5545.

If October 29 is not convenient, efforts will be made to schedule a conference at another time. It is hoped that these parent-teacher conferences will increase cooperation between home and school and heighten the effectiveness of the school's program.

Ikall

Charlotte.
The rig, a 1970 International, was owned by Todd Pool Builders, Inc., of Charlotte.

The investigating officer quoted Lee as saying he was slowing for traffic when the brakes on the rig stuck, causing it to jackknife into Ikall's lane of traffic.

The Ikall car, a 1973 Oldsmobile, was hit on the left front end and side by the jack-knifing rig, the patrolman reported.

A native of Mecklenburg County, Ikall was born on April 29, 1917, a son of Joe and Lucille Mack Ikall of Mooreville.

Survivors, in addition to the parents, include one son, State Trooper Joe A. Ikall, of Gastonia; and one grandson.

Funeral services for Ikall were conducted at 3 p.m. Sunday at the Central United Methodist Church in Mooreville, with the pastor, the Rev. Herbert C. Johnson, officiating. Burial was in Willow Valley cemetery in Mooreville.

A memorial fund for Ikall has been established at the Lowrance Hospital, according to a member of the family.

make written recommendations to the council on secondary roads in the formation of its annual work program.

The list of roads receiving priority will be determined on a point system, giving so many points for houses, schools, churches, businesses, industries, school bus routes, average traffic and the value of the road as a county thoroughfare.

Once the list is compiled, the commissioners may petition for change, and an appeal to the North Carolina Board of Transportation must overrule any action by the council.

Also, any changes contemplated by the council may be challenged by the commissioners in a petition.

Once the work program is finalized, the list will be published in the newspaper and posted at the county courthouse as a matter of public record.

Guard

Detachment will be in Shelby. A spokesman for the local Guard said all personnel presently assigned to the unit will remain, and "with a few minor changes" the same equipment will be assigned here.

The restructuring of North Carolina's Guard was proposed by the National Guard Bureau, and it has been approved by the governor. The reorganization will replace the 30th Division with the 30th Infantry Brigade and the 30th Engineer Brigade.

State Guard officials said the realignment will give the state a larger force. The number of units will increase by five and personnel strength by 156. All full-time Guard technicians will remain, and retraining will be kept to a minimum.

Jredell Retail Sales Jump 20 Per Cent

Jredell County's retail sales showed a 20 per cent jump in August, 1973, as compared with the same month last year, according to the North Carolina Department of Revenue.

Gross sales in Jredell during August, 1973, totaled $19.5 million, up from $16.1 million for the same month in 1972.

The increase was the result of time, Statesville pulled ahead of Salisbury as a retail center.

Billboards

not announced until October. Between mid-July and October some 280 signs were ready for advertising, thinking being that the cutoff would be October 15, and all signs then in the making would be legal.

Not so, allowed the state attorney general, who ruled that the ban became effective in July when the money was allocated. Thus the standoff that continues.

Nobilit explains the current status of the skeletons.
"They're in limbo," says Henry Clegg, assistant to the administrator of the highways division of the N.C. Department of Transportation.

"We simply aren't in the business of regulating poles, and those skeletons, or bare poles, do not constitute signs, so we can't order them taken down."

"Now, if they erect a sign on those poles, we can get them down," Clegg said.

"If they get a permit to erect a sign, it will be rejected," he said.

Basically, the law bans any sign within 660 feet of the right-of-way. In areas zoned for industrial or commercial uses. In other words, those miles of rural landscape aren't supposed to have any more billboards on them.

The state also requires advertising firms to get a permit before putting a display up, to make sure it will be in the proper area.

But none of this applies to those bare poles. "We asked the attorney general about them, and he said they were not poles under advertising—if we did that, trees might be labeled the same thing, or some such confusion," Clegg said.

Highway officials anticipate further legal maneuvering with outdoor advertising firms before the signs come down.

When the boy could not be located Friday night and Saturday, his grandparents notified the Shepherd Volunteer Fire Department Sunday. They said the boy was last seen near the intersection of Highway 150 and the railroad tracks.

Ed Carvick, chief of the Shepherd volunteers, this week expressed his department's appreciation for response to the search-and-rescue call. He said members of the Trooper, Lake Norman, Mount Mourne, South Iredell and Cool Springs fire departments, the Iredell County Rescue Squad, Explorer Post 339 and several individual volunteers joined the Shepherd department in searching for the youngster.

division breakdown:
Industrial, $28,312.75; commercial, $2,939.10; public schools, $2,541.50; professional, $1,967.80; residential, $1,599; public employees, $1,455.50; and rural, $815. An additional $1,777.23 has come in from sources not identified with a division, the chairman said.

"We're going to make it," Frye said, "I don't have any doubt about that. But we've got to make that extra effort to wrap up this campaign. The going isn't going to get any easier."

The annual appeal began September 11. The 1973 goal—and the 1974 UF budget—are the largest ever for United giving in this area. Mooreville-South Iredell never has failed to meet its United Fund obligations.

Contributions to United Fund are used to provide vital support to community services, many of which could not exist without UF appropriations.

Working directly with Frye have been these division chairmen: Ronnie Johnson, industrial; Larry Putnam, commercial; Mrs. Harding Rogers, professional; Lloyd Shumake, public employees; Gay Stewart, public schools; Mrs. Harry Hary, residential; and Howard Pender, rural.

A&T's 130-Member Band A First For Mooreville Parade

The 130-piece marching band of A&T State University in Greensboro has agreed to a precedent-setting appearance in Mooreville's November 20 Christmas parade. It will be the first collegiate band ever to participate in the annual extravaganza that will move through downtown the Tuesday before Thanksgiving. The A&T musicians, regarded as one of the nation's finest collegiate bands, will be prominent among 16 high school marching bands that will take part in the parade that is the town's traditional launching of the Christmas season.

engineers:

That a 16-inch water line be extended from the town's water treatment plant on U. S. 21 to the marine park 8,500 feet, at a cost of $208,000.

That an eight-inch sewer line be installed with a lift station on the Marine World site, 11,000 feet to connect with the town's system. This would cost approximately $252,000.

With the pre-treatment plant that would enable the park to equalize its flow of waste materials, the engineers' estimate total cost of the project at $520,000. The consultants outlined several alternative plans, but they pointed out their recommendations would provide abundant water for fire protection and also would enable the town to extend water and sewer service to the entire area within reach of the lines between the town and Marine World.

The town will not participate in the cost of the work. MW Development Company now is negotiating with the county government for financial assistance.

YDC To See Atomic Power Plant Film

Young Democrats of Iredell County will partake in a bit of inter-organization politics and view a film on the nation's atomic power plants during their meeting October 29.

Richard Doughton of Mooreville, president of the Iredell Young Democratic Club, said the meeting will begin Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Hall of Justice in Statesville. He said nominations will be made for YDC officers to be filled in November.

The film is called "How Safe are America's Atomic Power Plants?" The Statesville showing is one in a series of the area sponsored by the Carolina Environmental Study Group.

The 26-minute documentary examines the controversy surrounding the health and safety issues of building atomic power plants near major population centers in the Carolinas. Doughton said the public is invited to attend.
