Trojan Horse Coming Back

Remember the Trojan horse—the giant wooden steed that made history about 3,200 years ago? Visitors to modern Ankara, Turkey, may soon get to see a 75-foot-high reconstruction of it.

Present-day Ankara is believed to be near the site of ancient Troy. Since tourists have been showing a lot of interest in the legendary horse, the Turks have decided to build another one.

The original wooden horse, according to accounts of the Trojan War, was built by the Greeks after a long seige on Troy. The Greeks reportedly sent their ships off into the Aegean Sea on the pretense that they were leaving.

The Trojans, who are said to have been fond of horses, towed the huge horse inside the walls of the city to admire it. This proved to be a fatal move as the horse was filled with Greek soldiers, who ransacked the city.

Herring Wins Pony, Saddle And Bridle At Fair

Alex Herring, six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Herring of North Main Street, is a happy lad.

So are his brothers, 11-year-old Mac and six-year-old Cy.

The reason:

Alex won the pony, complete with bridle and saddle, given away as a door prize at the Iredell County Fair last week.

The boys were so excited, in fact, they didn't "sleep a wink" the night Alex won the pony.

How about the parents?

Well, they just aren't talking much, but you can sort of read between the lines that they aren't as excited as the boys!
