FmHA Requiring Conservation Certification

Farmers who apply for loans made or guaranteed from the Farmers Home Administration must certify they are in compliance with certain soil conservation requirements related to highly erodible and wetlands, according to Maynard Self, county FmHA supervisor.

The 1985 Farm Bill prevents farmers from receiving benefits from USDA programs, including FmHA loans, unless they are in compliance with conservation procedures relating to highly erodible and wetlands," Self said.

Before FmHA can complete the processing of a loan application, farmers must contact their local Agricultural Stabilization Conservation Service County Office and complete the necessary certification form.

The certification form to be signed by the applicant asks three basic questions dealing with cultivating highly erodible land not farmed before; wet areas converted for cropland since Dec. 23, 1985; and future plans to convert wetlands.

Self said farm borrowers who take the necessary certification actions now will not be delayed in receiving their spring crop loans. However, failure to take action could delay the delivery of FmHA loans and the USDA benefits.

Self's office is at 201 Water St. in Statesville.

Teacher Education Program At UNCC Earns Restoration

The N.C. State Board of education has announced restoration of full approval to all graduate and undergraduate teacher education programs at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

UNCC teacher education programs met with full approval by the state board earlier, according to Dean H. William Heller of UNCC's College of Education and Allied Professions, but last year the State Department of Public Instruction recommended provisional status for most programs until several existing situations could be changed.

Since the recommendation reflected no serious problems, Heller said, the college was able to remedy the situation quickly, and a state evaluation committee which visited the campus last spring recommended full approval be restored.

The purpose of the committee's visit was not only to review the provisional status but also to review a new program for prospective teachers of the severely handicapped. The board has also granted full approval for that program.

The state board's recent action makes UNCC's teacher education program one of few in the state that have no portions in provisional status with the state board.

The October edition of the AARP's News Bulletin highlights a problem that is becoming increasingly prevalent in the older adult population.

The problem: misdiagnosis of behavior or memory problems in senior adults.

Don't assume, the article admonishes, that behavioral changes or memory problems are symptoms of Alzheimer's Disease. The first thing to do is to make an appointment with the family doctor and get the senior in to be checked. And don't be surprised if the cause of the problem turns out to be one of any number of possibilities.

A good place to start is to go to the medicine abinet and remove all of the drugs - prescription and over-the-counter - the senior is taking. Place them in a bag and take them all with you when it's time for the doctor's visit.

It is not uncommon for an older adult to be experiencing symptoms of dementia and the problem be as simple as a reaction to multiple medications, or any number of other correctable conditions.

Dementia is a medical term meaning an extensive decline in intellectual ability. Mental processes, judgement, vocabulary and coordination are generally affected. Some of the wide range of mental impairments the term describes are reversible. Some are not.

In fact, the article notes, approximately 15 percent of the three million Americans with dementia suffer from conditions that are potentially reversible. That so many of these disorders can be reversed points up the need for accurate diagnosis.

Presented with a patient who is having memory or behavioral problems, a doctor must distinguish which of nearly 80 conditions that cause symptoms characteristic of Alzheimer's disease is causing the patient's difficulty. These range from the familiar such as depression, throid imbalances, diabetic complications and small strokes to lesser known conditions like Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

A panel convened by the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, has produced guidelines to help family physicians identify the more easily treated causes of dementia.

This group concluded the family should expect more from their doctor than just a name being given to a diagnosis. Identifying and then treating the reversible states is the ray of hope in the area of dementing diseases. Researchers estimate that only 10 years ago misdiagnosis of the cause of dementia was 25 percent. Today that figure is down to about 15 percent.
