Automotive News

Fifty-seven percent of all traffic fatalities occur at night — even though the number of miles driven at night is significantly lower than during the day. These statistics from the United States Department of Transportation prompt the Automotive Information Council (AIC) to offer some suggestions for increasing the safety of night driving.

Step one: Look as far ahead as you can. If you see an object that might present a hazard, assume that it will, and slow down until you are absolutely certain it is not a hazard. Keep your windshield clean. A windshield that is dirty inside or outside causes glare, decreasing visibility. Windshield wipers that leave streaks or chatter across the windshield also decrease visibility and should be replaced. Clean, properly aligned headlights are also very important for identifying hazards.

Step two: Avoid over-driving your headlights. When an object becomes illuminated by your headlights, you should be driving slowly enough to stop your car safely without hitting it.

Step three: Make sure other drivers can see you. Keep your taillights, turn signals and brake lights clean and in good working order. It only takes a moment to walk around the car to check these systems, according to AIC. Have someone sit in the car to operate the lights, brake and turn signals. Use your high beams, but don't forget to dim them for oncoming traffic or cars in front of you.

Step four: Don't drive tired. Fatigue diminishes responsiveness needed for safe night driving. If you absolutely have to drive tired, pull off the road, where it is safe to do so, and rest several times during the trip. Remember, it's better to arrive late and safe than not at all.

Health & Nutrition
by Judith Sheldon

When I was growing up, young women used to say they'd give anything for an operation that could take inches off their hips and put them on their breasts. Today, a surgical technique called "autologous fat augmentation" makes that type of body sculpting possible. The procedure consists of having the surgeon remove fat tissue from one part of the body and injecting it into another part, usually the breasts. However, for some women the surgery could prove to have tragic results. Last month the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons issued a report that should make any woman contemplating this procedure for breast enlargement stop and think very hard about the possible unpleasant consequences.

The ASPRS report points out that the technique is still largely experimental. More than that, the ASPRS says that the procedure is "hazardous" and its use on other parts of the body (usually the face) may offer only temporary benefits.

Simon Fredericks, M.D., clinical professor of plastic surgery at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, notes that the public needs to be aware of any practitioner who advertises or describes a procedure as a sure-fire cure-all for facial wrinkles and/or small breasts.

The ASPRS points out that most of the fat tissue transplanted dies after a year. The bulk that remains is formed by scar tissue which, in the breast, can mask the presence of breast cancer or cause unnecessary breast biopsies.

"It's NOT ALL IN YOUR HEAD: The new evidence that the ancient Egyptians used to drill small holes in the skull to relieve painful headaches. Today, we've learned a great deal about the probable causes of many types of headaches. We're also learning that headaches are no longer considered only psychological. Psychological triggers may be involved, but the pain is physical.

"We've made significant advances in treating headaches and, better yet, in preventing some of them. Two categories of migraine medicines are involved: abortive, which relieves pains and symptoms of an actual attack, and prophylactic, which prevents the attack from taking place. (Ask your doctor about one such prophylactic medicine, the beta blocker, propranolol.)

"Although I Disagree With Everything You Say I Will Defend Unto Death Your Right To Say It"

VOL. LIII Single Copy 25¢ Mooreville, N.C. (28115) Wednesday, October 28, 1987 No. 37

For Dieters, All Health-Minded Eaters

"Come in and let us make you healthier!" That serves as the advertising slogan for the Iredell Health and Nutrition Center in Mooreville and an introduction to the types of foods and other items offered at the store. The health and nutrition center, at 127 North Main Street, carries all types of health foods, ranging from flour to candies, and a wide variety of other items for health-conscious customers.

Mamie McKee is the manager of the local outlet. McKee said local residents are starting to take advantage of the assortment of items carried by the store.

"It was slow at first, but it's catching on now," McKee said last week.

She said customers looking to fill all types of needs visit the health food store.

"Some people are on strict diets and this might be the only place they find the things they need," McKee said. "And other people just like the idea of eating and using things that are good for them."

One of the most popular items at the health and nutrition center is the pure bran, which dieters and health food lovers alike purchase regularly.

Other items filling the center's shelves include natural cereals, whole wheat flour and an assortment of products made with natural grains.

But the center offers more than basic health-food selections. All types of dried fruit, natural fruit juices and natural sodas are on display at the store as well.

"I like the candy," McKee said with a smile, referring to the selections of sugarcubes and other non-sugary sweets on display.

The food selections also include all kinds of nuts and natural dressings carrying flavors that everyone would not expect to find in a health food store — things like mayonnaise and peanut butter, all pure natural of course.

Cosmetics, too, are a big part of the offerings at the health and nutrition center. Everything, ranging from shampoo and soaps to make-up, is available at the store and each item is completely natural.

McKee said there's no one category that would hold all the customers made up a large portion of the center's customers.

In addition to vitamins, many other health aids and supplements are available at the store as well as diet planning and some extras you wouldn't expect to find in a health food store — things like mayonnaise and peanut butter, all pure natural of course.
