is able to take advantage of the skills and talents of all its people, regardless of race, age, sex or wealth," she said. "...but some of you won't do it."

"Some of you are closing your ears to what I'm saying," she continued. "Some of you will let your buddies turn you on to drugs and compromise your future. You'll be happy and dumb, but you won't be happy for long."

Koonz added that the students who face the challenges and then look for opportunities will be able to find them.

"I would say 95 percent of you have good sense and there's a bright future for you," she said, "but the future will demand people who can think for themselves. The jobs will be there, but you will need to be literate."

Koonz, emphasizing the importance of enhancing the nation's education system, urged students to become teachers and help make those improvements.

"Have pride and confidence in yourself. Know that you can help others think," Koonz said. "You will be responsible for shaping the conditions in the schools and you must be ready for that challenge."

"It is no longer true that those who can't do teach," Koonz added. "Now, only the very special can teach."

To conclude her address, Koonz asked the students to join her in reciting the Preamble to the Constitution.

"When you say 'We the people,' remember you are 'the people,'" Koonz said after the recitation. "You are the ones who will shape the future."

Or, as the song said, the ones who must proudly and confidently lead themselves on the ground and reach for the stars.

vehicle against Dingler were dropped Sept. 9 after the prosecution failed to show he (Dingler) was at the scene.

In their three-page letter of complaint to Zimmerman, the families of the victims, said in part: "If Mr. Phillips is indeed so incompetent as not to be able to place the defendant at the scene of the crime, perhaps he should not be retained in a position to prosecute cases on behalf of the citizens of your district."

The letter of complaint to Zimmerman was signed by Richard Smith, whose 16-year-old son, Lynn Smith, was killed in the crash, and relatives of the three others killed: John and Judy Wilkie; Donald and Heather Rene Faulk, and the son of 53-year-old Donnie Thompson Faulk; and Everett Faulk, husband of Mrs. Faulk and grandfather of the 7-year-old child.

Donnie Thompson Faulk and her granddaughter, Heather Faulk, were in a station wagon that was struck head-on when Dingler's pickup truck crossed into their lane of traffic while rounding a curve.

Wilkie and Smith were riding in the back of Dingler's pickup.

Dingler's brother, 15-year-old Lorin Dingler, was in the cab of the truck with his brother.

The Dinglers apparently escaped death by being thrown or crawling from the truck before fire broke out.

Family members of the victims in their complaint to the district attorney said the prosecution did not place the police made to take care of that problem."

But Feimster added that he wished the police would start working on another Main Street problem: loud music from cars.

"People come riding by with their car radios blaring, not just at night, but during the day," he said. "I try to be rational, but I think it is absolutely ridiculous."

Phillips said nothing in court when the judge asked if he had any proof to counter the defense attorney's claims.

Zimmerman last week said his office had enough evidence to put William Dingler behind the wheel, he said he is looking into the possibility of other charges.

Frick

promotions/special events advisor. He handled all special events at three retail stores, including the Belle in Mooresville.

From 1965 until 1973, Frick was employed by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. in Winston-Salem. His duties included producing a weekly news magazine for field sales groups and assisting all departments with graphics, designs and publications.

In addition, he assisted in many promotions associated with R.J. Reynolds operations.

Frick, an 18-year resident of Mooresville, said he became interested in the downtown director's position when he first heard about the local commission. He added the job appeals to him because it is a way to help the community develop.

"I want to do this because this is home and it is going to be home," Frick said. "I'm interested in being a part of this effort and I think we can make some definite improvements."

Frick said the fact that he already knows many of the local business people will allow him to get started quickly.

"I'm hoping to avoid the getting-acquainted delays and get started with some one-on-one contacts," he said. "It's important that we get people involved and active in this project so we can start making some firm plans now."

"Right now, we've got an advantage over most of the other towns who have similar programs," he added, "because in most cases, the downtown businesses began to shut down. We don't have that kind of flight yet. We need to make sure we don't get it."

With a full-time director on board, the Mooresville program is qualified to apply for membership in the North Carolina Main Street Program next year. Membership in the state program would give the town access to state personnel with experience in a wide range of topics concerning downtown rejuvenation.

Puett said the number of complaints about nighttime activities on Main Street has dropped sharply since the department began the evening patrols.

"We've had some complaints about the way our patrol has cleaned up things on Main Street," Puett said.

Puett emphasized, however, that the department's staff still will be on the street and eliminate any illegal activity.

"We're not there to harass anyone and the town doesn't have anything to worry about," Puett said. "We're just there to keep things legal."

Local merchants have noticed the change on Main Street.

Ray Boone, store manager of the Belk department store, said he has been one of the main supporters of the Main Street patrol.

In the months before the night patrol began, the morning clean-up to remove beer cans and other litter from in front of the store was a regular chore. And in one instance, a window in front of the store was shattered during the night.

"There has not been nearly as much litter since the night patrol began," Boone said Tuesday, "and most of the other problems have been eliminated."

Larry Feimster, owner of Feimster's Jewelers Ltd., agreed.

"I've noticed that the amount of littering is down," Feimster said, "and I would like to commend the police for the job they've done."

But Feimster added that he wished the police would start working on another Main Street problem: loud music from cars.

"People come riding by with their car radios blaring, not just at night, but during the day," he said. "I try to be rational, but I think it is absolutely ridiculous."

Port Village Center Headed For January Opening

Construction is moving right along on the Port Village Shopping Center just west of Mooresville near the Interstate 77/N.C. 150 intersection. N.C. 150 is at the right and the I-77 overpass is at the top. The shopping center will be anchored by a Food Lion grocery store and should be ready to open by mid-January, according to Rob Neill, vice president of Bob Neill and Associates, the Charlotte development firm in charge of the project on the 15-acre site. The exterior walls are already in place in the shopping center and Neill said construction is progressing on schedule. The larger, walled-in area in the foreground will house the Food Lion store. The remaining space will be leased to smaller businesses. One business, Videoville, a movie rental store, has already been secured and operators of several other businesses have expressed an interest in the location, Neill said. The Food Lion store will contain 25,000 square feet and the remaining 12,000 square feet will be divided into individual shop areas.

for a while. But, in August 1978, it was necessary to further enlarge, and Barnette added another 7,200 square feet of floor space to his existing plant.

An additional 16,800 square feet of floor space is currently being added to the facility, work on which is expected to be completed by November.

All through the growing process, Barnette added additional workers.

Navy in 1962 with the rank of chief petty officer after 21 years of military service.

Barnette got his start in the foam fabrication field when he joined "Brothers Company" in Cornelius as an engineer after retiring from the Navy.

Recognizing the possibilities in the field, Barnette seized on the chance to apply his production know-how and technical background to the exciting field of airline seat manufacturing.

After talking with officials at a company which made airplanes and airline equipment, including seat frames, Barnette decided to make the jump.

As he relates it, the people had been looking for an East Coast supplier for the foam cushioning for the seats and so he decided to risk it.

Needless to say business boomed far beyond his expectations, and now Custom Products sells the finished product directly to the airlines.

When asked about his success, Barnette said: "Our employees are the key to our success. Many of them have been here many years. One of our employees - Betty Powers - has been with the company since 1973, and several others have been on the payroll since 1977."

"If you don't have good people working for you to carry out your ideas you can't succeed," Barnette added.

Barnette, who will be 59 in October, is the son of the late Mallard and Madeline Nannery Barnette. He graduated from Mooresville Senior High School before joining the Navy.

Pat, 46, the firm's new general manager, is a native of Michigan, but has resided in North Carolina for some 20 years. He spent 17 years with Fiber Industries in Cleveland.

He is married and the couple has two children.

Terrell Baptist Mission Plans Revival Services

A revival is scheduled to be conducted at Terrell Baptist Mission, beginning Saturday, Oct. 3, and continuing nightly at 7:30 o'clock through Oct. 11.

Visiting preachers will be the Rev. Dan Keever; the Rev. William Smith, pastor of Digham Baptist Church; the Rev. Herman Pigg Jr., pastor of Lawings Chapel Baptist Church in Maiden; the Rev. Charles Ingle, pastor of River View Baptist Church in Lincoln.

The pastor of Terrell Baptist Mission, the Rev. J.C. Beal, will also participate in the services. The church is located on Gladding Bridge Road, south of the old Lake Norman Music Hall at Terrell.

The public is cordially invited to attend the special services.

The family will receive friends at the Neill Funeral Home in Mooresville this (Wednesday) evening from 7 until 8 o'clock.

Morehead Scholarships are among the most prestigious academic awards in the country. The scholarships provide all fees for four years of study at UNC and include financial aid for summer internships and travel.

The Morehead Foundation, which provides the scholarships, was established in 1945 by the late John Morehead, a 1981 UNC graduate.

Morehead Scholarships are awarded each year to public high school and independent school seniors who demonstrate exceptional qualities of leadership, academic standing, character and physical vigor.

The scholarships are based solely on merit. Financial need is not a consideration.

On Sept. 9, at the Iredell County Fair, the jayvee team competed for the first time ever and received third-place honors and were awarded with a $50 check.

This weekend, the cheerleading squad, which has no junior varsity football team this fall to appear on the sidelines for, will travel to Carowinds and compete in the ninth annual Junior Cheerleading Championship, sponsored by Varsity Spirit Fashions and Carowinds.

The success of those squads depends somewhat on the number of local followers each team has present at the competition, so area support will be greatly appreciated by the jayvee team.

Members of the team include captain Kim Beam, co-captain Leslie Alexander, Suzy Brooks, Jennifer Chambers, Angie Neill, Jennifer Rodgers, Shearhazard Trakas, and Jennifer Vandervell.

Other extras include male members Eddie Archie, Doug Duquette, Ricky Green, Chris Sarrit, and Shannon Warren, who help with difficult stunts.
