

Doing MRD's dirty work

If Jeremy Sherrill had known then what he knows now, he might still be sleeping off his summer, waking up late and taking a dip in his backyard pool. Chalk it up as a lesson learned. Applying for a job as a summer intern with the Mooreville Recreation Department, Sherrill, a Northwest Cabarrus graduate, former member of the Mooreville American Legion Moors and current member of the Pfeiffer College baseball program, was hired. And, as a result, he's taking care of some of the department's dirty work. Caught in the act recently, he weeded around the outside fence at Moor Park as part of his regular duties. The grandson of Mooreville's Frank and Patsy Meadows, he's part of a crew taking care of maintenance at all the fields and parks as well as others areas covered under the department's wide blanket.

Artist selected for tribute to Earnhardt

The artist selection process complete, next comes final approval from those closest to the project for the planned Dale Earnhardt Tribute in Kannapolis Village Park.

A committee dealing with the artist selection had a final decision last week out of three qualified finalists, named Arizona-based Clyde "Ross" Morgan to create the statue. The artist stood out the brightest among the final three by impressing panel members with the feeling and emotion he projected while describing several of his past projects, namely the monument he built for the Utah Vietnam Era Veterans Memorial.

Also helping swing the votes Morgan's way following a 45-minute deliberation was the details portrayed in a small bust of Earnhardt that he brought with him to the interview session. Several of the committee members were impressed with the way the bust seemed to capture the seven-time NASCAR Winston Cup champion's spirit.

"Dale's eyes," noted Gary Mills, Kannapolis parks and recreation director, "tell Dale."

Another item that weighed heavily in Morgan's favor was his willingness to relocate to the Kannapolis area for the work. Other candidates, one from Illinois and the other from Boone, had expressed desire to do most of the work from their respective home bases.

Committee members agreed, however, that it may be too much to expect to have the artist do all the work in the immediate area.

Many are also hoping to keep the surprise factor intact, building for a dramatic unveiling of the finished product.

As for the selected artist, though admitted unfamiliar with the racing scene that made his newest subject such a well-known personality, he considers himself a perfectionist and is looking forward to the challenge.

"I love what I do," he offered after receiving word of the assignment. "My work, I feel, portrays the essence of a person. I would want to work very close with the family, and then the general public."

In addition to deciding on the sculptor, committee members also made official selection of well-known NASCAR artist Sam Bass, based in Concord, to work on the commemorative wall that will also stand in the 16-acre park.

Next step in the process is passing on the recommendations of the selected artists to Teresa Earnhardt, the subject matter's widow, and Mooreville-based Dale Earnhardt Inc., officials for approval.

The Kannapolis City Council will also have to apply final approval and further delve into planning the financial aspects of the project. City officials will soon launch an official campaign to raise funds for the tribute.

Presently, according to Kannapolis Public Information Officer Jennifer Woodford, there is some $1,200 in the fund helped being built by donations that have already started filtering in from fans across the country.
